

The American College of Radiology, the premier association for radiologists, seeks a Director to provide oversight, direction, and management of the Breast Imaging Accreditation (BIAP) Programs in our Quality & Safety department.

The Director will be responsible for providing oversight, direction, and management for the 4 Breast Imaging Accreditation Programs; interacting with the FDA on sensitive mammography accreditation and certification issues; supervising, training, and developing staff; coordinating BIAP activities with the non-breast accreditation programs; handling patient complaints as part of the BIAP consumer complaint process; coordinating all Breast Imaging Centers of Excellence activities; developing and monitoring budgets; staffing committees and subcommittees; making BIAP presentations at local and national meetings; and working with consultants, Quality & Safety staff, and the MIS department, as Q&S process improvements continue and new accreditation software is developed. In addition, the Director will have responsibility for conducting and/or managing breast imaging related special projects, as applicable.

Qualified candidates will have:

- Master's degree in public health, science, engineering, business administration, or healthcare field
- 5+ years experience in management in radiology
- Experience with mammography, breast MRI, and/or breast ultrasound preferred
- Strong computer skills including MS Office
- Strong written communication skills that include writing technical reports
- Strong verbal communication skills that include public speaking
